Si tratta della copia digitale di un libro che per generazioni è stato conservata negli scaffali di una biblioteca prima di essere digitalizzato da Google nell'ambito del progetto volto a rendere disponibili online i libri di tutto il mondo.

Ha sopravvissuto abbastanza per non essere più protetto dai diritti di copyright e diventare di pubblico dominio. Un libro di pubblico dominio è un libro che non è mai stato protetto dal copyright o i cui termini legali di copyright sono scaduti. La classificazione di un libro come di pubblico dominio può variare da paese a paese. I libri di pubblico dominio sono l'anello di congiunzione con il passato, rappresentano un patrimonio storico, culturale e di conoscenza spesso difficile da scoprire.

Commenti, note e altre annotazioni a margine presenti nel volume originale compariranno in questo file, come testimonianza del lungo viaggio percorso dal libro, dall'editore originale alla biblioteca, per giungere fino a te.

WITH reference to the Copious and Critical Latin-English Lexicon of Mr. Riddle, the author, in his preface, says: "While my octavo Latin-English Dictionary has met the ordinary wants of Colleges and Schools, there has still been a call for a more copious work of the same kind as a book of reference in libraries, and for the convenience of advanced students who do not shrink from the purchase of a large and costly volume. At the same time it has appeared desirable to transfer to our language the substance of two critical and elaborate Latin-German Dictionaries by Dr. William Freund, in which Latin Lexicography has been carried to a high degree of perfection." Of the Gesamtwörterbuch (condensed dictionary) of Dr. Freund, which he has chosen for the foundation of his labors, he says: "By an admirable system of compression, without material abridgment, the substance of the larger work is given or represented in the smaller, while the latter not only contains the results of more mature consideration, but is also enriched with additional matter, and recommended by other advantageous features peculiar to itself; and in particular has had the benefit of an extensive revision by the author."—"The excellence of these Dictionaries, especially of the Gesamtwörterbuch, consists in careful philological criticism,—an admirable arrangement of phrases,—a very minute and thorough application of a system already adopted by earlier Lexicographers for the classification of meanings (which, it may be observed, are here divided and subdivided, not only into Proper and Figurative (metaphorical), but into Proper and Metonymical, or, Proper, Metonymical, and Figurative, and also into General and Special),—and the addition of many new words and phrases from the most recent researches of philologists."

Of the work thus described, the following is an abridgment, with certain modifications of arrangement and with additions from other sources. It is not pretended, of course, that there is here any thing strictly original or new. The design of the Editor was only to prepare from the ample and excellent materials furnished in the large work of Mr. Riddle, with occasional aid from other Lexicographers of note, a Latin-English Dictionary for the use of Schools and Colleges, embracing in a volume of convenient size all that is necessary in this department of study, presented in a manner as plain, simple, attractive, and useful as possible. The following statement and explanations will serve to give an idea of the plan here intended to be carried out:

1. Words.—This work contains all the words in the Latin Classic authors usually read in Schools and Colleges.

2. Quantity.—The quantity of syllables is distinctly marked, except in a few proper names, and words of foreign origin, in which it has not been ascertained or clearly decided by analogy.—In order to avoid disfiguring the words by marking the quantity of every syllable, as a general rule, a vowel before two consonants or a double consonant (Gr. 782), being always long by position, is without a mark and to be regarded as long: Also, a vowel before a mute and a liquid (l, r, Gr. 785), in the same syllable, being common, i. e. sometimes long and sometimes short, is left without a mark; but where the vowel before a mute and a liquid is naturally long or short, it is so marked.

3. Etymology.—The Etymology of simple derivative words, wherever ascertained, is noted—the etymon or primary word or root being inclosed in parentheses; but when a second word, or any number of words in succession are derived from the word preceding, or from the same etymon, the fact is generally indicated by the abbreviation id., i. e. idem, the same, in parentheses (id.). Doubtful or merely fanciful etymologies, as they can serve no good purpose, are not stated, or are indicated by the mark (unc.), i. e. uncertain. In some instances, a plausible or probable etymology is given, but in such a way as to indicate a degree of uncertainty respecting it.

4. Composition.—In compound words formed by the union of two or more words without change of form, the component parts are indicated simply by a hyphen (-) between them; as, PER-SUADEO, PRO-MITTO, etc. But when the form of either or of both the component parts is changed in the compound, the simple words are given, unchanged, in parentheses; as, OPPRIMO (ob, premo), ILLIDO (in, lædo), etc.

5. Classifications of Meanings.—Under each word having different classes of meanings, the Proper or Primary meaning is always given first, distinguished by the abbreviation Prop., or I. Prop. prefixed. The Second class of meanings, called Metonymical, consists of those which are changed from the strict and proper meaning by Metonymy (change of name); i. e. a figure of Rhetoric by which the name or adjunct of one thing is transferred to another which resembles it or is in some way related to it, as cause and effect, container and contained, material and that formed from it, sign and thing signified, whole and part, etc.—This class is distinguished by the abbreviation Meton., or II. Meton. prefixed. The third class of meanings is that called Figurative, in which, words properly applied to physical or material objects, are by figure, trope, or metaphor, applied to other objects, abstract, mental, or spiritual, which have or are supposed to have to the former some real or supposed resemblance. Thus, DURUS, Prop.: hard, not soft. Fig.: harsh, uncouth (in manner), unimpressible (in character), unfeeling, unkind (in disposition). The following is an illustration of all the three classes in one word, scil. CALIGO. I. Prop.: vapor, mist (arising from the earth). II. Meton.: darkness or obscurity (caused by, or the effect of vapor). III. Fig.: mental darkness, dulness of apprehension, a being in a fog (mentally). Each of these divisions is sometimes further divided into General and Special (marked Gen., Esp.), and these again, in some words, into still minuter shades of meaning. In this work, all these meanings under each word are placed together at the beginning of the article and printed in Italics, so as at once to come under the eye of the student, and not scattered through, and mixed up with the illustrations and quotations in a long article, where it is difficult to find them, as in most Dictionaries arranged on the German model. All the classes of meanings and their subdivisions under each word, are further distinguished by a series of numbers prefixed. Each number, except those not inclosed in parentheses, refers to a corresponding number, in the same article, below (under the head of EXAMPLES) prefixed to the example or examples quoted in support or illustration of the meaning or class of meanings to which it is prefixed above. The numbers not inclosed in parentheses indicate that no quotation is given under that meaning, but only a reference to the author, without quotation. By this arrangement it will be seen that the various meanings which a word assumes are classified and numbered, and in most cases illustrated; and, also, the process is indicated by which a word is deflected from its proper and literal, to its most remote signification.

These reference figures thus serve a double purpose. 1st. They direct to the quotation under the head EX. in support or illustration of the meaning to which it is prefixed; and 2d, they serve to show the number and order of the meanings or classes of meanings given under each word; and also the number and order of meanings under each of the general divisions, Proper, Metonymical, and Figurative, where they occur, and as they are sometimes still further subdivided into General and Special; thus,

The word ARENA has six different meanings: of these, one (1) belongs to the class marked Prop., four to the class marked Meton., and of these four, Nos. (2) and (3) are marked Gen., (4) and (5) Esp.; while No. (6) belongs to the class marked Fig.—Again: The word DUCO has seventeen different meanings or shades of meaning, of which the first six are of the class marked Prop.; the next three, from (7) to (9) are of the class marked Meton.; and the last eight, from (10) to (17) are of the class marked Fig. Of all these, Nos. (1) and (10) are meanings used in a general sense, marked Gen., and all the others are meanings of the word used in a special sense (Esp.). These different classes of meanings, however, with their subdivisions, it must be remembered, do not all occur under every word. Many words have meanings only of the first class (Prop.), and many have only those of the First and Second, or First and Third. In all quotations or references, the name of the author only is given, without specifying the part of his works quoted, simply because such specification would have greatly increased the size of the book without any corresponding benefit.

6. Synonyms (SYN.).—In the Latin, as well as in other languages, there are many words of similar meaning, which, though usually called Synonyma, are but seldom used indiscriminately by good writers. A proper discrimination of such words is an important exercise for young, as well as for more advanced students, and tends much to an accurate and critical knowledge of the Latin language; and yet, in all the School Dictionaries extant, there is nothing or next to nothing given to assist the student in this branch of study. This defect is attempted to be here supplied in some degree. Nearly 7,000 words of similar signification are carefully distinguished as to their proper meaning and use, though necessarily with much brevity; and the distinctions indicated are for the most part supported and illustrated by quotations from classic authors. The authorities chiefly relied on, in this part of the work, are Dusmenil, Ramshorn, Döderlein, and Hill. In many of these articles, there is, at the end, a brief resumé of the distinctions made, in Latin sentences formed for the purpose, and marked G. D. (Gardin Dusmenil).

7. The Abridgment.—This Abridgment of Mr. Riddle's Latin-English Lexicon has been made, not by omitting any of the meanings there given of any word contained in this, nor by rejecting any example or quotation from classic authors necessary or important to illustrate or support the meanings given, but by omitting words not of good authority, or not used by authors of the classic period of the Latin language, and many of the numerous quotations, which, not being necessary, only embarrass the learner,—retaining, however, a sufficient number, and such as are recommended by their appositeness, brevity, simplicity, and the reputation of the authors from whose works they are taken. These quotations, in many instances, are translated, so far at least as seemed necessary to make them more useful to younger students.—Sometimes words not strictly belonging to the classic period are introduced, not on their own account, but because they are the etymons or primaries from which are derived other words sanctioned by classic usage. Thus sifted and disencumbered from every thing unsuited to such a work as this, the excellent work of Mr. Riddle, it is believed, is rendered even more valuable and useful to students in our schools.

It remains only to say that, in the preparation of this work, I have consulted with some care every authority within my reach relating to the subject, and particularly, besides the works already mentioned in connection with the subject of Synonyms, I have derived valuable assistance occasionally from Bailey's Facciolati, the Dictionary of Alexander Adam, the Etymological Dictionary of Valpy, and from the Lexicons and Dictionaries (several of them of great value) in use among ourselves. From the Dictionary of Dr. Anthon, explanations under several Geographical and Historical articles have been adopted, which are indicated and acknowledged by the mark † annexed. Although every possible care has been taken by the most competent composers and careful proof readers to avoid typographical errors, yet, in such a work, it would not be strange if some such errors should still be found. As soon as discovered or pointed out they shall be corrected in the plates.

In the hope that something has here been done to supply a deficiency long felt in this department of study, this work is now respectfully committed to the favorable consideration of Teachers and Youth in this land with the best wishes of

THE EDITOR.

(1) venit ad nos Cicero tuus ad cornu, —ad iudicium omnem suam familiam coegit, Cæs.; —ad urbem —ad castra, etc., profectus est, Cæs. Ellip.: before a g.n. of the name of a deity, (templum, ædem, etc., being understood); as, ad Castoris (sc. templum) volitarunt; so, ventum est ad Vestæ (sc. ædem), Hor.; —(2) habes hortos ad Tiberim, Cic.; —ad urbem remanere, Cæs.; —esse ad Iconium, —ad Baias. So Ellip.: ad Apollinis, ad Bellonæ, ad Opis (sc. templum). In this and the preceding sense, ad me, te, se, etc., by meton. of the pronoun, are often used in Plaut. and Ter. for ad domum meam, tuam, suam; as, oratus sum venire ad te huc, Plaut.; —Spectatores, plaudite atque ite ad vos comitatum, id.; —cumus ad me, Ter.; —te oro ut ad me Vibonem statim venias, Cic.; —(3) ad vesperum, towards, —ad hiemem, —ad multam noctem, till late at night; so usque ad hanc ætatem.—(4) presto fuit ad horam mortis destinatum, at the appointed hour of death, Cic.; —thus, ad diem solvere, to pay on the day; —ad id tempus, Cæs.; —(5) annos ad quadraginta natus, Cic.; —familia ad hominum millia decem, Cæs.; —(6) ædem ad partem dimidiam detegit, Liv.; —viaticum ad assem perdidit, even to the last farthing; thus, omnes ad unum, all to a man, all together; —nostri ad unum incolumes, Cæs.; —or without omnes; consurrexit ad unum.—(7) vita ad spem servanda, for hope; —ut ad cursum equus, ad arandum bos, ad indagandum canis, sic homo ad duas res, ad intelligendum et agendum natus est, Cic.; —so, niles ad naves, a marine; —servus ad remum, a galley rower; —servus ad cyathos, a cup-bearer; —homo ad nullam rem utilis.—(8) timidus ad mortem, Cic.; —ad rationem solertiamque præstantior; —mentis ad omnia cæcitas.—(9) ad istorum normam esse sapientes; so, ad arbitrium, ad exemplum, ad formam, etc.—(10) nihil ad tuum equitatum, in comparison of.—(11) occisis ad hominum millibus quatuor, Cæs.; —ad duorum millium numero ceciderunt, id. verbum, word for word, literally; ad hoc, or ad hæc, besides; ad plenum, fully, abundantly; ad unguem, with care, carefully. See UNGUIS. SYN. AD; APUD; IN = into.—AD implies motion to or towards; as, ire ad urbem, or, in the sense of No. (2), it means near or at the terminus, where motion ceases; as, esse ad urbem.—APUD is never used after a verb of motion, but denotes simply the being at or near a place.—IN, meaning into, differs from ad in this, viz., AD means motion to or towards a point without an object;—ad = into, motion to a point within an object;—ad = ad extra; in = ad intra:—ire ad domum, means to go to a house, not into it; ire in domum, means to go into it. AD is opp. to ab; in is opp. to ex.

In Composition, ad changes d into the first letter of the simple word beginning with c, f, g, l, a, p, r, s, t; as, accorro, officio, etc., Gr. 21.—z, sd; and into c before words beginning with g; as, acquiro. Before words beginning with q or s, it is sometimes dropped; as, agnosco, astare. In some of these cases, however, it sometimes remains unchanged; as, addicio, adsto.—In effect, it denotes, 1. with verbs of motion—a going to or near, approaching;—with verbs of rest—a being near or at; as, accedere, adire, adesse;—2.
